It is fully reviewed. An exhaustive and dense is made of the changes inaugurated by President Grant in the dealings of the government with the Indians.

Continued employment of the military is stated to be necessary for the repression of hostile tribes, and it is urged that as they come to be pacified the government should endeavor to prevent them from falling into pauperism and crime.

The policy of the government as respects the hostilities is thought to have been successful in the past, but it is urged that the government should be prepared to direct these people to pursue a consistent policy of progress and civilization.

It is stated that the government should supply with subsistence during the period of the initiation of the experiment. In the statistical figures appended to it, it appears that, exclusive of those Alaska, there are 300,000 Indians within the limits of the United States.

Of these, 97,000 are civilized, 125,000 semi-civilized and 78,000 wholly uncivilized. The Commissioner says belongs not to the savage, to the sober view of the situation, those years will see the alternative of extermination from the Indian question.
